Chapter 1 by Magdalene

"Name?"

"Rain Sophia Willow," I replied stiffly.

"Age?"

I hesitated and the captain gave me a look. "Fifteen."

He nodded slowly. "Parents?"

"They were murdered by your soldiers, captain," I said, scowling.

He glared at me. "Who were your parents?"

I sighed, "Liana Jackson and Joseph Willow."

The captain studied the paper he was looking at. "Says here you were arrested for treason, stealing, sabotage, and . . . murder?" He raised his eyebrows at me. "Who do you work for?"

"I don't work for anyone."

He studied me, probably wondering if I was lying, but he gave up. "You murder Commander April after throwing her off the roof?"

I looked at him strangely. "I didn't kill her. I pushed her off the roof but it was only two stories up. It shouldn't have killed her. Especially a commander."

"There were knife wounds in her left shoulder, leg, and heart. Also third-degree burns on both arms. Please explain." I could tell the Captain was getting impatient.

"Okay, I burned her but I didn't sl See more of Story Wars confused. There were security cameras on the roof. Look

He gave me a look and bal ou erased the footage. But, before I could protest, sirens wailed over the speakers,

"Defenses breached. The building is under attack."

"Impossible." He muttered.

"No damage inside detected. The suspect is known as Pax."

I winced. "Dang it," I said under my breath.

The Captain barely glanced at me and stood up, pointing a gun my way. He began whispering into his mic. A few seconds later, his cold eyes met mine. "Ms. Willow, please remain seated until someone comes to get you."

I nodded. "Will do, Cap'n." I mock saluted him and he reddened, quickly leaving the room.

"I will remain seated until someone comes to get me." I murmured quietly to myself. "I will stay in this seat until Pax comes to get me."

Payton had arrived.
